

Priscilla is a catalyst for adaptive innovation, helping leaders and teams achieve breakthrough results and sustained success.

With over 25 years of diverse business experience across various sectors, Priscilla has held multiple executive roles in healthcare, including corporate responsibility for organizational development, talent management and employee engagement. She has served as a community leader to develop and support women, a member of the board of International Coach Federation Phoenix and a member of the executive committee of The Conference Board's Learning, Development, and Organizational Performance Council. She maintains active memberships in various professional organizations, including the Institute of Coaching, and currently serves on the advisory committee of Spiro Coaching Institute.

Priscilla has authored and co-authored multiple publications on coaching and leadership. She has received designations as an Organizational Development Innovator, Professional Certified Coach and Master Corporate Executive Coach. She is certified in multiple assessments, which includes the Center for Creative Leadership Benchmark Suite, Leadership Versatility Index, Hogan Suite, and Emotional Quotient-Inventory 2.0.

Ranked as Assistant Professor of Health Care Administration, Priscilla earned her bachelor's degree in Organizational Communication from Rollins College, and both her master's degree in Business Administration and doctoral degree in education with a concentration in Organizational Leadership and Human Services Administration from Nova Southeastern University. Priscilla's research focuses on leadership development in healthcare.